Major Attractions

Guachimontones

A pre-Hispanic archaeological site and UNESCO World Heritage Site an hour west of Guadalajara, Guachimontones is a major discovery that shed light on the Teuchitlan culture and a complex society that existed as early as 300 BC. At the site is an unusual circular pyramid that is said to have been a central altar during rituals; it's one of the few circular pyramids that exist in the world. This is a quiet setting devoid of crowds, so it's easy to revel in the sacred atmosphere.

Tequila & Agave Fields

In the area around the town of Tequila, greenish blue fields of agave stretch out mile after mile over the rugged, hilly terrain. All of the tequila in the world is produced in this region, which includes parts of the states of Guanajuato, Nayarit, Michoacan, and Tamaulipas. The fields of blue agave plants are so beautiful that they have been named a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Notable distilleries include Herradura; Sauza, the first to export tequila to the United States; Jose Cuervo, one of the most recognizable names in the world of tequila; La Cofradía, which has been in the tequila business for more than 50 years; and El Llano, a fifth generation distillery that specializes in 100 percent agave tequila.

When travelers visit Tequila, they can sightsee at the town's 18th century church, visit the National Museum of Tequila, and tour a distillery where they learn about the tequila-making process and sample different varieties of the spirit. Beyond the tastings, visitors can also ride a tequila train, tour the agave fields via helicopter, hike a nearby volcano, embark on a hot air balloon ride, and take part in a bike tour. In addition to the area being known for tequila, the town is also an important producer of opal, multiple tones of the stone used to make beautiful garments.

Museo Cabañas

One of the top attractions in Guadalajara, Museo Cabañas was originally built at the beginning of the 19th century as an orphanage and medical complex. Unique for its time, this large complex incorporates several unusual features designed specifically to meet the needs of its occupants. It is also notable for the harmonious relationship between the open and enclosed spaces, the simplicity of its design, and its size. In the early 20th century, the chapel was decorated with an extraordinary series of murals, now considered some of the masterpieces of Mexican art, which are the work of José Clemente Orozco who was one of the greatest Mexican muralists of the period.

Catedral de Guadalajara

Guadalajara's cathedral is the city's most beloved and noticeable landmark with distinctive neo-Gothic towers. Erected in 1558 and consecrated in 1618, the building is almost as old as the city itself. The towers were built after an earthquake toppled the originals in the mid-19th century. Visitors enjoy seeing light shine through stained-glass renderings of the Last Supper and listen to the working pipe organ rumble sweetly from the rafters.

The interior includes Gothic vaults, massive Tuscan-style gold-leaf pillars, and 11 richly decorated altars that were given to Guadalajara by King Fernando VII of Spain (1814–33). The glass case nearest the north entrance is an extremely popular reliquary, containing the hands and blood of the martyred Santa Inocencia. In the sacristy, which an attendant can open upon request, is La Asunción de la Virgen, a painting by Spanish artist Bartolomé Murillo in 1650. Much like the Palacio de Gobierno, the cathedral combines a variety of architectural styles, including baroque and neoclassical influences.
